NO VERDICT REACHED

RIEGER-COVINGTON JURY SEEMS TO BE INABLE TO AGREE.

At 6 o'Clock Last Evening It Was Re manded to the Custody of the Marshal to Report To-morrow Morning.

The jury in the federal court before whom D. V. Rieger and R. D. Covington, of the Missouri National bank, were tried, has failed to agree as to its verdict after twenty-four hours' deliberation. At 6 o'clock last evening the court asked if the jury had reached a verdict and the foreman said none had been agreed on and there was no hope for one so far as he could see, Judge Hallett sent them out again to deliberate until Friday morning at 19 o'clock, when they will report to Judge Philips. A hung jury and a mistrial is almost assured now.

The jury was called before Judge Hallett yesterday morning at 9:30 o'clock and anounced that no verdict had been agreed on. It went back until 2 o'clock and then the same announcement. At that time the court told the members of the time the court told the members of the great expense and time the case involved, and intimated that their deliberations should be carried on in a reasonable manner. He said he was compelled to return to Denver and would have to leave last evening. He would allow them until 6 o'clock, and if no agreement had been reached at that time the jury would be remanded to the custody of the marshat with instructions to have it report to Judge Philips on Friday morning at 10 o'clock. The jury was not allowed to have luncheon yesterday at noon, but the privation dia yesterday at noon, but the privation did not appear to help the members in arriving at a verdict.

The fact that no luncheon was allowed the members yesterday at noon was the cause for much comment about the federal building during the day. No one seemed to know why they were thus deprived of their food.

At the same time that she sued for divorce, his wife had also procured a restraining order prohibiting Mr. Lesear "from in any way controlling or using said cows or their milk." Mr. Lesear at once made known his willingness to obey the court's order, and the deputy sheriff is wondering who milked the cows. Mrs. Lesear probably had it to do. The restraining order was made returnable next Saturday.

MR. HAGERMAN'S IDEA.

He Would Make the Law Prohibit Any Bank Director or Officer From Borrowing From His Bank.

"If I were making the laws that govern the business of the national banks of the country, I would make it impossible for either a director or an officer of the bank to ever borrow one cent, either directly or as an indorser for another," remarked Frank Hagerman in his argument to the Frank Hagerman in his argument to the jury in the Rieger case in the federal court. "But the law does not prohibit such transactions, and the facts are that business men who are large borrowers get into banks as directors simply that they may the more early get the loans they require. The idea is wrong, and it ought to be corrected, for as long as the opportunity remains there will be some to abuse it."

WARRANTS NOT NEEDED Judge Henry Makes This Ruling When Police Have Reason to Believe Crime Was Committed. In his instructions to the jury in the case of T. Milton against Wofford and Flan-agan, Judge Henry laid it down yesterday that a police officer has a right to arrest without warrant when there exists reasonable cause to believe that a crime has been committed, even should it turn out that in fact no crime had been committed. This ruling is held by some to be a reversal of the decision rendered by Judge

Colonel Waters bowed deferentially to Judge Henry, as he referred to the latter's record as chief justice of the supreme court. Judge Henry read the decision, was silent a moment, and said:
"I shall have to rule with you, colonel, in the face of this decision, but I must say I don't see how the supreme court could have rendered it without being unconstitutional."

Saloonkeepers Who Sold Liquor on Election Day Filed for Future Reference.

Saloonkeepers to the number of thirty appeared before the police commissioners yesterday to answer to the charge of keeping their places of business open on election day. They represented the grist of transgressors the police had presented to the police court mill on the day after the election in an unsuccessful effort to enforce the law, and it was a row of smiling faces that was presented to Mayor Jones and Commissioner Gregory when the inquisition began. The first question elicited a titter from the mixologists, and emboldened by the absence of a reproof, many laughed outright at the succeeding two questions. or, sternly, "that this is not a very funny "I should say not," added Mr. Gregory,

DRIVING OUT MONEY CHANGERS

City Counselor Middlebrook Gives an Opinion That Usury Cannot Be Collected From City Employes.

Money lenders who have made a busines of lending money to city employes and tak-ing a mortgage on their salaries have struck a snag that was entirely unexpected. Sev-eral firemen who had obtained loans in this manner and who concluded the rate of interest was too high, consulted a lawyer and were advised to serve notice to the city auditor to deliver their pay warrants to themselves alone, instead of to the money lenders, to whom they had given written agreements which would have enabled the latter to collect the warrants in person. The city auditor asked for advice in the matter from the city counselor, who replied as follows in a communication yesterday:

You have been served, it seems, with

"You have been served, it seems, with notices of a formal character from employes of the city to the effect that you shall not deliver their warrants to any person to whom they may have been assigned by such employes, the warrants being for salary coming to the employes from the city for services performed.

"I see most of these employes are in the fire department. I have read the various forms of assignment and contracts which have been executed by these employes in favor of the different persons and firms. I consider that these assignments and contracts are void as against public policy; although it is attempted to be disguised, nevertheless it is clear to me that these assignments and contracts are void as against public policy; although it is attempted to be disguised, nevertheless it is clear to me that these assignments and contracts cover unearned salary; some of them partly, and some of them wholly covering unearned salary. The public service will be crippled and its efficiency greatly impaired if the earnings of the employes are sold and the money received and spent by the employes before it is earned. The city is not interested in protecting these employes in evading their just debts, but what the city wants to serve and maintain is efficient public service, and this cannot be done when the incentive to work has been taken away, by the employe bargaining his salary to another before such salary is carned.

"My advice to you is to not deliver these warrants specified in these notices to the holders of any contract or assignment executed by the employe.

Then, there was the cigar, long and thin, it was at once the axis and the meridian of his "get up;" he was conscious of its artistic value. His face was a suitable foil for its splendor.

All eyes were upon him when a woman arose, approached him, and, without a word, took the cigar from his mouth and threw it toward the cuspidor. Then she resumed her seat. The young man looked horrified, and spat the remainder of the cigar from his mouth. He could not endure the grins and laughter that followed the woman's action, and he strolled to a more secluded piace.

"You shouldn't mind that." said Superintendent Sanford, trying to suppress a smile. "The woman is mildly insane. She is in charge of the lady attendant beside her, and is on the way to an asylum."

"She may be insane," said a bystander, in hearing of the young man, "but she probably never did a more rational thing in her life."
